Meet Nathan...

This is Nathan, doctors believe he has a mutation in the SLC4A1 gene, a very rare blood disorder that causes red blood cells to rapidly break apart. Rather than lasting 30 days, Nathan's red cells last only one week. There is only one other case like his in medical literature and the family needs all the help they can get.

Nathan has to return to the hospital every four to five weeks to receive blood transfusions. He's already had more than 40. He suffers from an enlarged spleen and is dependent on transfusions to live and most likely will for the rest of his life.
